

Today, (March 2, 2021) we have done some testing of classical music. When we asked how the studying went on the scale of 1 to 5 with the classical music, most of them said 4 or 5. Soon we are going to be testing no music. Unfortunately many people didn't remember to sign and bring back the form or they didn't want too. Because of this reason we will have to have a group of three, which I think is a variable but my partner Annella doesn't. Therefore we are having only three people in the none music group and will put this in the sources of error. Tonight we shall be doing the research paper. Few minutes later, so we have tested the no music group and the big observation from just the studying is that the classical music group had a longer focus span (With 2 minutes left they started getting antsy) than the no music group. The no music group was antsy with 3 minutes left. Person number eleven from group two (the no music group) told us that she thinks that because they had no music they got bored as there was nothing to listen to. After we heard this we decided to ask person 19 from group number one (The classical music group) why she thinks that they where able to stay focus more, and she said that she didn't know if it helped or not. Although it sure seems like we had the Mozart effect today!

Today we have done two tests for the classical and no music group. Tonight we will be finishing our research paper and mark the tests. Tomorrow we will be collecting that data on to a chart.

So yesterday night we did nothing. Thanks to that we are quite far behind. Anyways today we have done the tests of rock and Jazz. The rock group were dancing and going crazy with it on and at the end they said it was very hard to study with. The Jazz group was focused much like the classical music group. When we asked them how it was they said that they didn't notice any difference. At lunch recess we will be testing another group for rock again so that we have more accurate results.

I've been busy completing multiple tasks. My partner Annella isn't here today so I will have to be testing by myself and currently I am confused with her organization system.

Today we have officially finished testing!

March 11, 2021

I AM SO PANIC! WE REALIZED WE DIDN'T DO A CORRECT TEST!!!! WE DON'T HAVE TIME FOR THIS THE DEADLINE IS ONLY 8 DAYS AWAY! I am so stressed I don't know how we'll ever get this done! What we did today was make graphs and find out we messed up our stuff so bad!

March 15, 2021

We ended up testing our families so we are a bit closer to be back on track. Annella thinks we can get it done but truthfully I'm not sure how we can get it done so it's ready by Friday. We have MANY things left to do including some work not just the trifold & video. I'm not as stressed as yesterday when we got NO work done but still I don't know how we can complete this in time!

March 16, 2021

Annella and I are doing a science fair marathon to get analysis, conclusion, application, sources of error, and acknowledgement done. Also we may start on the video.
